(54)	Title:	SEED BASED ABSORBENT

(57) Abstract: UN germinated seeds contain as low as 5-20% water on a fresh weight basis. This accounts for the extremely low metabolic activity in dry seeds, a feature that makes them suitable as perennating and dispersal organs. During germination, the initial phase involves uptake of water by seeds through imbibition which is a physical and non-metabolic processes that hydrates seeds. The imbibition force is usually very high and some seeds can absorb water from saturated salt solutions with a potential of nearly 100 megapascals. This quality forms the basis of a new water based absorbent made from seeds of ocimum americanum. these seeds absorb approximately ten times their dry mass of water in 20 minutes and form a translucent mucilaginous coat around seeds. The crushed seeds improve water retention of sand greatly, and can easily replace expensive water retention polymers in tree nurseries.

 (54) Title: A METHOD OF PROCESSING TEA FLOWER.

(57) Abstract: This invention relates to a process for tea tree product, more particularly to a process for tea flower, which is comprised: picking, dehydrating, steaming, drying, fast freezing and crushing. The said picking is conducted before or after tea flower being pollinated 2-3 days, and wooden or plastic hollow basket is used for tea flower picked, the picked tea flower is required to be classified immediately and then to be laid open; the said dehydrating is conducted by laying the flower on the bamboo-made mat or cement floor with the thickness of 2-5cm and turning the flower every 1 hr, the time of the dehydrating is not exceeding 10 hr and the most preferred is 6hr; then, the said steaming is conducted by employing steaming machine for tea producing directly and controlling the temperature of that within the range of 80·C to 100·C; the said drying is performed in several times, preferred in 3-4 times, the temperature of that is controlled within the range of 60 to 180·C, the thickness of the flower laid on the plate of dryer is 2-3cm, cooling is performed after each drying and the time of cooling is prolonged successively; the said fast freezing is performed for 20min at the temperature of -20·C to -40·C; after that the said crushing is performed in crusher immediately. The process of the invention is a natural process without any chemical reaction and chemical extracting, so that the natural nutrients and various active ingredients of the tea flower are maintained in maximum amount

(54) Title: ELECTRIC ARC WELDING SYSTEM

(57) Abstract: In a electric arc welder, a first controller controls a first power supply (30) to create an AC current between the electrode (E) and workpiece (W) by generating a switch signal with polarity reversing switch points and is responsive to first power supply specific parameter signals. At least one slave controller operated a slave power supply (32) to create an AC current between the electrode (E) and workpiece (W) by reversing polarity of the AC current at switching points using welding parameters specific to the second power supply (32). An information network (70) connects to the first controller and the slave controller and provides digital first and second power supply specific parameter signals for the first controller and the slave controller. A digital interface (50, 52) connects the first controller with the slave controller to control the switching points of said second power supply (32) by the switch signal or command from the first controller.
