(54) Title: GLASS PANEL SOLAR POWERED TUNNEL DRYER

(57) The innovative factors considered included; Optimized glass-collector plate clearance, removal of air from the clearance created, size of the heat collector, insulation of the whole drier, solar power supply, air movement using car radiator fans, optimization of heat collection using stainless steel wool, enhancement of natural convection and provision of simple heat collector panel. The glass-collector clearance was optimized using a genetic algorithm giving a value of 25mm. This ensured minimal air in the clearance, increased radiation energy production and absorption. A 4mm thick glass was used as top cover whereas the collector plate had a thickness of 5mm. The plate was painted black using blackboard paint to enhance the heat collection process. To minimize heat loss by convection in the glass-plate clearance, the clearance was vacuumed to 0.25 atmospheres. The heat collector panel is developed as a single unit measuring 1245.5mm by 1245.5mm. The heat collector chamber was optimized to give a depth of 100mm with 0.1mm aluminium sheet on an insulated bottom and sides. The bottom had 50mm of polystyrene sandwiched between 2mm plywood for insulation. Heat transmission from the plate to the drying air was optimized using stainless steel wool. The wool provided contact with the steel plate and increased the surface area and contact time with the drying air. Air flow was enhanced by two DC fans located at the inlet and outlet operated by a 100W solar panel. Eight heat collectors were found to sustain a temperature of 50 degrees centigrade over a period of eight hours under normal weather conditions.
