1.3 Patents published

(21) Application no.: KE/P/2015/2319 (22) Filing Date: 11/08/2015

(54) Title: Process and production of Catha Edulis based alcoholic beverages ad non-alcoholic beverages

(72) Inventors: Muchangi Kevin Nthiga, P. O. BOX 770-60100, Embu, Kenya

(73) Applicant(s): Muchangi Kevin Nthiga, P. O. BOX 770-60100, Embu, Kenya

(74) Agent: None

(57) The disclosed invention involves value addition of Catha edulis shoots/twigs also known as 'Miraa/Khat' by means of wine and beer production and juice production from the said plant. Alcoholic beverage production entails value addition and preservation of these active chemical components in a less polar solution i.e. ethanol (relative to water). Two phases i.e. alcohol and a little lipid are used to attach Cathine and Cathinone respectively, Cathinone —a ketone and being more lipophilic, will adhere to the lipid phase. Cathine will hydrogen bond with alcohol. An emulsifier keeps the two phases in solution without separating. Juices are made in a similar procedure but omitting fermentation. Two phases are also incorporated; water and a little lipid. A variation can be made where the lipid phase is deliberately omitted so that only Cathine is present in the juice with traces of Cathinone. This is done to capture different markets. The invention can be used industrially to produce 'khat' juice concentrates (dilute to taste) juices, ready to drink 'khat' juices and fruit flavored 'khat' juices as well as 'khat' based wines and beers with khat being an important ingredient of brewing.

(57) It is known that electricity production /generation in an ordinary automobile alternator is by rotation of electromagnets inside a set of coils. During this rotation the battery powered electromagnets subject the coil to changing electromagnetic flux hence inducing an electric current on the coil. My invention relates to producing an electric from stationary electromagnets and stationary coil. A stationary coil or set of coils is subjected to alternating electromagnetic influences from a stationary electromagnet or subjecting the coil to a single electromagnetic interruption, hence inducing an electric current on the coil. The electromagnets are powered by a electric power source via switching device. The electric current so produced will be used to power electronic and electrical appliances. The principle objective of my invention is to produce electricity efficiently, pollution free and that is reliable.
