(54) Title: SODA ASH DOSING TO INCREASE PH IN GEOTHRMAL

(51) Int.Cl.: C 11D 3/33

(57) Abstract: Acidity in geothermal power plants with direct contact condensers is a greater challenge. In Olkaria, the acidity in the condensate is as a result of dissolution of carbon dioxide and hydrogen sulphide gases which occur in the condenser where the steam gets in contact with the oxygenated cooling tower water which is sprayed to condense the steam. Currently in most parts of the world where geothermal power generation is practiced, no soda ash or caustic soda dosing is involved because mostly the problems frequently experienced is scale formation which is mitigated by application of scale inhibitors and in the cases where acidity is experienced like Philippines, caustic soda is used for dosing. The invention is directed towards solving the problems of condensate acidity in the power plant cooling water, controlling sulphur loading in the cooling tower film pack and condenser, and balancing of the primary and secondary non condensable gases in the condenser using soda ash / sodium carbonate. It also addresses the possible mechanical and chemical challenges that may be experienced as a result of the use of sodium carbonate (soda ash) in the dosing plant
