(57) The present invention discloses a tamper proof system that monitors and control speed in public transport vehicles. The system cuts off the engine power after appropriate warning and sufficient time when speed of PSV exceeds 10% of the set maximum speed to make a safe stop and then sends over speeding alert message to central monitoring centre according to Fig. 9 shown below. The invention is crafted to enable a vehicle power to resume immediately the system receives a confirmatory text of fine repayment. In case this system is tampered with, a message of the details of the car, its location, the driver, the owner and his/her address plus the operator's central fleet manager are relayed to the central traffic monitoring for over-speeding and intentions to defeat justice. The system action recorded by traffic monitors is designed to act as evidence in court against the commuter company in case of undue delays to the clients (passengers). This will be message enough to the owners that no profit is so valuable to be placed above public safety and no enterprise so hallowed to be above the law and thus inculcate discipline among PSV commuters.

(51) Int.Cl.2016.01: A 61K 38/50

(57) Abstract: The present invention provides a pharmaceutical composition containing albumin-binding arginine deiminase fusion protein (AAD) for treating cancer or other arginine-dependent diseases. The AAD fusion protein can be purified from both soluble and insoluble fractions of crude proteins, it binds to human serum albumin (HSA) and has its high activity with longer half life for efficient depletion of arginine in cancer cells. The specific activities of wild-type ADI and AAD in the present invention are 8.4 and 9.2 U/mg (at physiological pH 7.4), respectively. The AAD used in the present invention can be used in the treatment of various cancers (e.g. pancreatic cancer, leukemia, head and neck cancer, colorectal cancer, lung cancer, breast cancer, liver cancer, nasopharyngeal cancer, esophageal cancer, prostate cancer, stomach cancer & brain cancer) and curing arginine-dependent diseases. The composition can be used alone or in combination with at least one chemotherapeutic agent to give a synergistic effect on cancer treatment and/or inhibiting metastasis.

 (51) Int.Cl.2016.01: A 61B 17/285, A 61B 17/50, A 61B 17/30
 (57) Abstract: Disclosed herein is a tool for removing an implanted item from beneath the skin, the tool comprising: a clamping device configured to engage with the skin to retain the implanted item in a known position relative to the tool; a cutting device for cutting an opening in the skin; and a gripping device configured to move through an opening in the skin and grip an implanted item; such that, in use, the implanted item is retained by the clamping device substantially in the known position and the cutting device creates an opening in the skin through which the gripping device then passes to grip an implanted item. Advantageously, the tool reduces the complexity of an implant removal process and does not require significant operator skill to use. It further reduces the time required and the variation in the outcome of such a procedure.

(57) A zero trust transaction authentication architecture and tools are disclosed. The architecture and tools are characterized by a bank server, one or more third-party servers initiating transactions received from third-party terminals, on account number objects in a core banking system configured on the bank server. The third tool, a bank server, receives the objects of the transaction from the second tool, a third-party server embodying a second third-party terminal, and generates a public and private key combination for the respective transaction objects, and a further one-time password (OTP) sent to the user's telephone number, or alternately TOTP or device token. The public key is used to generate a secure URL, where the first tool, a first third-party terminal, redirects to, and validates the transaction with OTP. A final confirmation is then transmitted to the second third-party terminal.
