(54) PORTABLE MULTIPURPOSE EXTRACTION JIG

(51)

(57) The present invention relates to a method of enhancing equipment maintenance by providing a fast, safe and cost effective jig for extracting shrink fitted and seized couplings and gears. The jig was designed with a C64 (3.2MW) overhead cooling tower motor and gearbox and generator coupling in mind. This jig has become a frequently used tool by the maintenance team because of the frequent inevitable need to dismantle these components during maintenance. Each 3.2 MW Power plant has 4 cooling tower motor- gearbox assemblies and one load generator. Every time one of these equipment undergoes maintenance the portable multipurpose has to be mounted for the extraction process. Prior to this invention the extraction process would be contracted out and these large components had to be ferried to an external workshop for extraction via a different method of pressing and drilling, thereby incurring large equipment down time and high maintenance costs. The drilling process would also weaken the gears. The jig is also fabricated from vanadium enriched plates to ensure that it can withstand a pulling force of over 150 tons capable of extracting highly seized components without experiencing fatigue failure. Different sizes of hydraulic jacks can also be mounted on demand basis depending on available hydraulic jacks. The jig also operates alongside a set of packings to ensure compensation of shorter lengths of jacks.
